

Morgrim's Backstory

Morgrim was raised in an orphanage in Mist Hollow, coming from unknown parentage. The nuns that ran the orphanage hammered home that his parents were most likely devils, demons, beggars, thieves or better yet, dead. His imagination wandered, reading books of daring adventure, danger and sword fights. Eventually running away from the nuns in search of his origins, fame and fortune. Morgrim took odd jobs, stole, and learned anything and everything anyone would teach him. Eventually crossing the Lyndon Strait into mainland Yorin in his 20's.

In a small town off the forest he met his mentor Tornac, a gold Dragonborn ex-adventurer turned blacksmith. Tornac taught him everything he knew about smithing but also about sword fighting and other things he learned as an adventurer. These 10 years were the happiest times for Morgrim. It all came crashing down one day when a rich Noble demanded a custom sword be forged but with a challenge to Tornac, forge the sword blind in one week. If he was successful the Noble would pay full price and bring Tornac with him to Lyndon and become a royal blacksmith. But, if Tornac failed he would have to finish the sword and the Noble would only pay half the agreed amount. Tornac could not turn down such a challenge. Tornac guided with Morgrim's help began to slave away on one of the finest blades ever to grace Yorin. The Noble unexpectedly arrived 3 days early and demanded the sword be finished by the next morning. This was impossible. Upon the morning the Noble was furious and in an instant slayed Tornac where he stood. Morgrim tried to avenge his fallen mentor but was bested and nearly killed. The Noble spared him but left a parting gift of a slash down his face that nearly took Morgrim's left eye, leaving him unconscious and bleeding.

That day was a turning point in Morgrim's life, he left the peaceful small town Tornac had retired to and headed out seeking revenge. Over the years Morgrim dedicated his life to swordsmanship and fell in with a rough crowd. Finding work as a bodyguard, bouncer, or hired sword suited him just fine and made good gold. Morgrim's quest for revenge brought him to Lyndon, the only clue that he had on the Noble's residence. Realizing that killing a Noble would be almost impossible to do alone he sought out allies, and found The Brotherhood of the Crow. A bit more idealistic than he is, Morgrim found their work fulfilling but he was also good at it, and he didn't mind crossing some lines if it meant hurting the ruling class.

Present day Morgrim finds himself frustrated with his leading Murder as they have been denying him access to information on his quarry and have forbid him from going at it alone. So he has been doing solo side muscle jobs until he can find a way back onto his road for revenge.