

“The Source of All Rot”

Within the realm, rumors spread regarding a location just outside the town of Saverda regarding a strange structure hidden within the Knog Jungle (pronounced Nog Jungle) called, “The Lath Cutter”. Stories about a building full of unimaginable treasures, finding true love, even mentioning a well that can grant anyone’s desire fill the tavern every night. Planting ideas for those bold enough to search for the Cutter. Adventurers all over come hoping to have their fortunes, glory, and wishes fulfilled have found and headed into the Cutter; none have returned. The Lath Cutter appears to attract a new band of adventurers, each with their own goals and ambitions in mind. Will they achieve their desires, or will the Cutter claim another soul?

This campaign is a dungeon crawl based on the 2014 5e rules that will test the party’s skills in cooperation, problem solving, combat prowess, and sanity. Permadeath is in this campaign. Once your character reaches 0 hit points, they cannot be revived. If someone loses their character, the DM will allow them to control an enemy character meant to fight against the party. There is a checkpoint system in this campaign and the DM will let the party know when they have reached a checkpoint. Once at a checkpoint, anyone can switch out a character for a new character, if that character is still alive and a person with a dead character can bring in a new character. Players cannot change characters once they’ve selected and leave the checkpoint area. Rationing food will not be part of this campaign unless the party wants to do that.

Severity rule

When a player or the DM role a 1 on a D20 die the DM must roll a D100 and determine an outcome. A range where 100 is the best-case scenario and 1 is the worst-case scenario. Example: If a player rolls a 1 while trying to do a performance check, and the DM roles a 93 on the severity die, the player may just fumble a few words. Another would be if an enemy tried to attack a player, roles a 1, and the DM roles a 3 on the severity die the creature may just damage, or kill, itself. Players can use inspiration roles to counteract severity roles.

“Oh Baby!” rule

On level up, the players can role a D20 die. If the player scores a 20 on their die, they can add one attribute point to any of their stats to a max of 20. If a player does not score 20, the DC for the next, “Oh Baby!” role is reduced by 5 (So the player needs a 15 to hit the DC on their next level up) until they hit the threshold; it is reset to 20 for the next level up. This can be done outside of an attribute level up and players can use inspiration to reroll “Oh Baby!” dice.
