ROGUE'S GALLERY

The Rogue's Gallery presents twelve NPCs, one from each of the core 5e classes. Each NPC is presented at escalating challenge ratings. This allows you to use them at different points in your PCs' level progression, or to account for the NPCs becoming recurring fixtures or villains in your game.

BELLISAROMIR, ALSEID DRUID

A frown perpetually clouds the face of this graceful alseid, and an impressive rack of antlers crowns his head. His humanoid torso and arms are tattooed in sepia, blue, and black, with an owl, tree, and rose motif. A cloak of owl feathers settles on his shoulders, and a stryx can usually be found settling on his back or flying a short distance above him.

Aggressive Forester. The stryx living in the Old Margreve keep watch over its roads and paths and deliver news of interesting characters and events to the druid Bellisaromir. The young alseid shadows creatures his friends point out to him, ostensibly to make sure they don't despoil the forest, but in truth, he hopes they do things he can take offense to. Bellisaromir likes to fight, and he isn't ashamed to use his skills and knowledge of the forest to gain advantage over people he goads into conflict. Every time he sees city folk perish in the forest, he exults at the small victory of the old ways over civilization.

Rot and Rebirth. Bellisaromir believes he is a part of the Margreve's life cycle, and he takes his duties seriously. When he comes across gravely injured creatures, regardless of whether they are man, beast, or something else entirely, he dispatches them. He then ensures the body is left in a manner and place where its decomposition is quick, so the forest can grow stronger. Over the years, he has gained the unflattering nickname "Ghoul of the Old Wood" from frequent travelers of the forest.

CHARACTERISTICS

Personality Trait. Others seek the gods in temples and shrines, but I know their will is only revealed in the natural world, not an edifice constructed by so-called worshippers. I pray in the woods, never indoors.

Ideal: Cull. The weak must be removed for the strong to thrive.

Bond. I know the ways of civilization rise and fall. The forest and the Old Ways are eternal.

Flaw. The decay after death is merely the loam from which new growth springs—and I enjoy nurturing new growth.

BRAHM THE VENTURER, MINOTAUR BARBARIAN

Brahm is tall and broad-shouldered like most of his kin. He keeps his chest and back uncovered so as to better display the labyrinthine branding that patterns his back and shoulders. He greets everyone he meets with a practiced disinterest but becomes talkative as he grows more comfortable with them.

Seer of the Middle Sea. Brahm became familiar with ocean travel at a young age. After becoming injured in a fierce battle against pirates off Raguza, he left his parents' employ aboard the Glory of Gold and convalesced with his grandmother in Triolo. While there, he began to experience strange visions. These typically occurred while he was engrossed in watching the merchants and their patrons, who lived and worked in the neighborhood. When he discussed his new ability with his grandmother, she shared his family legacy with him and guided him through interpreting his visions. When he returned to the ocean, as a mate aboard the pirate-hunting brigantine Falcon's Hunt, he immersed himself in his work. He has gained a reputation as a skilled shipboard battler and sailor. When he is ashore, Brahm will tell someone their fortune in exchange for a drink. His visions, and their interpretations, are startlingly accurate.

CHARACTERISTICS

Personality Trait. While I enjoy sharing my insights, I never give them away for free.

Ideal: Freedom. Knowledge of what may come allows for greater choice.

Bond. My grandmother passed a token to me (a smoky quartz prism) when she explained our gift of the sight. It's my most prized possession.

Flaw. I saw a truth once that I refused to speak, and tragedy was the result. It haunts me to this day.

GALDVYR STEADYSTONE, BEARFOLK RANGER

Galdvyr stands just over seven feet tall and is covered in dark brown and gray fur. His body is crisscrossed with scars, including a prominent one stretching from his right shoulder to his left hip. People shift uncomfortably as he appraises them with bright, piercing black eyes.

Grizzled Guide. In all his forty-eight years, Galdvyr Steadystone has never ventured farther south than Vellarsheim in the Duchy of Domovogrod. He has spent over thirty years as a guide in the Northlands, directing travelers and merchants from his home of Bjeornheim through the treacherous lands of the Vargrike and Trollheim to Huldramose. His many years of experience have placed a high demand for his services, which results in bidding wars during the summer when mercantile traffic is at its peak.

Hunter of the Damned. During his many northern crossings, Galdvyr has successfully led numerous expeditions through encounters with its many dangers, such as giants, werewolves, and fey. None of those creatures bedevil him as much as the walking dead, though. Galdvyr despises vampires in particular, viewing them as unnatural parasites. He has a dream of traveling to Krakova to free it from its undead oppressors but remains in the north to ensure his family continues to thrive. If an opportunity to destroy undead arises during a rare foray when he has no charges to care for, Galdvyr has been known to alter his path in order to come into conflict with them.

CHARACTERISTICS

Personality Trait. I don't waste nature's bounty, and I dislike those who do.

Ideal: Honesty. My word is my bond.

Bond. I'm keeping things safe in my wanderings by always keeping them moving from place to place.

Flaw. If there's a choice between the easy way and the hard way, the hard way is always best. Easy is for the weak and incompetent.

HJALMAR DÅKASSEN, DWARF WIZARD

Hjalmar Dåkassen carries an air of superiority whether he is in a jarl's council chambers or having a drink with his reaver kin in the street. His cold eyes and impassive expression serve to intimidate his foes and allies alike. His cloak is made from the hide of the polar bear he single-handedly killed when he was but a boy. The rings that top his staff jingle against each other in an almost musical manner, which seems almost incongruous given his stern countenance.

Born to Pillage. When the raiding season arrives each year, Hjalmar is the first to heed its call. He revels in the rush he feels at the first sound of weapons on shields. Hjalmar endeavors to be at the tip of the spear when his comrades form a wedge. He leads with lightning and thunder to clear the path between him and his enemies' front line. Despite his lust for battle, Hjalmar can be patient when it is called for. His units have used his magically conjured fogs and storms to cover evidence of their presence on numerous occasions, only to attack while their targets' defenses are down.

Faith in the Old Ways. Hjalmar is a devout adherent to his peoples' traditions and pays much deference to Wotan, Thor, and Volund. In battle, he chants the holy words of his gods or intones their hymns, his deep baritone underscoring the cries of the injured and clashing of metal. He sees no dishonor in ruthlessness, but he treats fairly with his opponents once they have surrendered. Hjalmar's actions and demeanor on the battlefield have caused him to be singled out as a priest on numerous occasions, much to the chagrin of enemies who expect him to comport himself like a cleric.

CHARACTERISTICS

Personality Trait. I quote the ancient songs, searching for wisdom.

Ideal: Tradition. Our ways are the legacy of the gods. Who are you to say differently?

Bond. Even a hated enemy who shows me honor can expect the same in return.

Flaw. Any slight demands blood. No other payment will do.

INBAR ALIKHANI, HUMAN ROGUE

A friendly smile settles easily on the face of this young Nurian woman, and her eyes sparkle with merriment—or perhaps mischief. An overfull satchel sits at her feet, bulging with knickknacks and souvenirs of her travels. Despite her heavy armor and load, she is light on her feet and ready to quicken her pace at the first sign of trouble.

Wandering Heart. Inbar wants to see all the wonders the world has to offer. Since her parents took her and her siblings from their home in Laksor to see Mount Parini on Kyprian when she was a child, she has longed for a life of exploration and adventure. Her wanderlust clashes with her deep love of her family and her desire to eventually settle down and raise a family of her own.

Shortly after she came of age, to the consternation of her parents, she used most of her coin to purchase gear and a fare to Jelle-Anda in the Dominion of the Wind Lords. From that port, she sailed to Stannasgard in the Northlands and has since traveled the breadth of the north on foot, having numerous adventures along the way.

Fascinated by Goblins. Inbar is captivated by goblins and their culture. She knows they pose a danger to more settled societies, especially in the remote reaches of the north where they can gather in numbers. Part of her fascination comes from the relative rarity of seeing a goblin in her homeland, and part from her respect for a people who thrive on the fringes of civilizations that see little of value in them. Inbar would love to be welcomed into a goblin settlement to live with and observe them. She wants to know about their day-to-day lives, how their family units work, and if they are truly as different from her and her kin as she has heard.

CHARACTERISTICS

Personality Trait. I can always keep a cheerful disposition no matter what's going on.

Ideal: Freedom. I make my own choices and guide my own destiny.

Bond. One day, my parents will be proud of me and what I achieved.

MAEBE DWORHEL, DARAKHUL MONK

Maebe stands barely taller than a dwarf, her leathery skin stretched tightly over her skeleton like taught hide on a drying frame. Her ram-like horns have been filed to mere stumps, and her eyes are black pits that evince no mercy or pity.

Banished. After her trial, a perfunctory affair performed for the entertainment of the court, Maebe was exiled from Corremel, City of Lanterns, for the crime of smirking at the Black Prince while he was wearing violet-and-apricot-striped hose. Stunned at how quickly the verdict was reached, she barely had time to gasp before the bailiff dragged her away from the courtroom, hustled her down a hallway, and thrust her through a door onto the shadow road leading to Corremel, City of Ale.

Walking in the Dark. Maebe couldn't say how long she wandered the path in a daze, but at some point, she took a wrong turn and then the wrong exit and ended up stranded in the Underworld. Before she had time to become frantic at her plight, she stumbled upon a lone figure in the lightless tunnels. The pair walked together, stopping only when Maebe needed to sleep. Growing hungrier by the day, Maebe grew desperate for food, but her companion explained that he could teach her to go without nourishment indefinitely. He also promised to teach her how to get vengeance on the lords of the shadow fey for expelling her.

Hungry for Revenge. After Maebe's companion taught her how to use her body as a weapon, she allowed him to transform her into what he was: one of "the People." She has long since left him, and travels both the surface of Midgard and the Underworld, gathering allies, increasing her skill and knowledge, and preparing to return to the Shadow Realm to finally have her justice.

CHARACTERISTICS

Personality Trait. If you have what I want, I'll take it.

Ideal: Power. Those weaker than me deserve neither mercy nor pity.

Bond. I was branded a traitor and driven into exile. I will return in force and bring glory to my name.

Flaw. When the living are near me, I lick my lips and salivate profusely.

NAMAZZI AKULLO, HUMAN FIGHTER

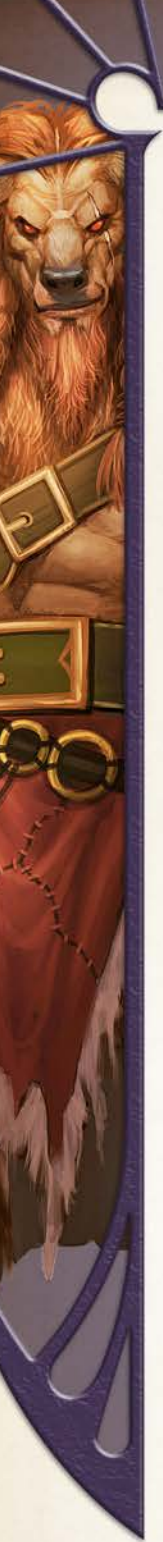

With her toned physique, straight-backed posture, and swift gait, Namazzi appears to be a much younger woman than she is. Her wise, confident eyes and the occasional patch of graying stubble on her shorn head betray the truth, however. Namazzi has ensured the safety of trade goods and travelers from Nangui, the City of Sorcerers, for over three decades.

A Blade Among Books. Namazzi's parents were certain their youngest child would be a renowned parchment-maker as every member of each of their families had been for generations. Their certainty evaporated when their young daughter began running through the home battling imaginary fiends while brandishing a wooden serving spoon as though it was a sword. Namazzi didn't have the patience to prepare the skins used to make parchment, or to stretch and scrape them carefully, but she excelled at killing the rats drawn to the scent of unprepared animal hides. It didn't take them long to realize that it would be more practical to find other tasks to occupy Namazzi's time, so her parents procured the services of a retired city watch captain to train her to fight.

Ghost of the Market Stalls. Namazzi excelled in her training. It wasn't long before she learned everything her teacher could impart on her, and she was eager to learn more. She knew her parents couldn't afford to hire a rotating cast of trainers to teach her, so she sought out talented warriors and traded her cooking and cleaning services for martial training. By her early teens, she was well-versed in every weapon and fighting style common to her home city. Around that time, she met Endana, a girl about the same age as her. The two became fast friends, and Namazzi would hover near Endana's workplace, where her friend danced to draw customers to her parents' market stall. When men made advances toward Endana, Namazzi would try to persuade them to leave the girl alone. When she failed with her words, she would follow the men and administer a sound beating to them. Before Namazzi could explore her deepening feelings for her friend, her parents asked her to help guard a caravan carrying their parchment to markets in Siwal. Beholden to her family, she agreed.

A Ribbon in the Wind. Though she missed her friend and family, Namazzi exulted in the freedom she found on the road. She also enjoyed the chances it gave her to utilize her skill with weapons against hostile targets. When she returned to Nangui, she rushed to see Endana at her earliest opportunity, but her friend's parents, who had never approved of Namazzi, told her Endana had been married to an advisor to Nulu Nagoa, the city's ruler. Namazzi tried to gain access to the Branches District to see her friend but was rebuffed by the guards at every attempt. Following her disappointment, Namazzi joined another caravan as a guard, and so it went for nearly 20 years. After the death of her parents, Namazzi's brother took over the family's parchment business and began trading more aggressively with other settlements. He and Namazzi have formed a partnership in which he oversees production, and she makes sure their products make it to their intended markets safely. She only occasionally wonders if Endana ever thinks of her.

SIGRIT BRÜL, HUMAN PALADIN

Sigrit is a tall, athletic woman who bears the scars on her arms and face with pride. The white in her blonde hair is almost invisible, and the dark blue of her eyes is almost black. She walks with confidence, stopping briefly to greet anyone she knows with a curt hello and a flat-lipped smile.

Devout Daughter of Perunalia. Sigrit has venerated Vasilka Soulay, the matron of Perunalia, since her childhood. She is the latest in a generations-long line of women in her family who have joined the amazons in defense of their nation, and she is proud of all she has accomplished. Her peers see her as stern and unyielding, though those who have had the honor of fighting alongside her find her to be a bastion of calm prowess in a chaotic melee. Sigrit is the last of her line, and she fears she might die before she meets a man worthy enough to meet her standards in a mate.

CHARACTERISTICS

Personality Trait. My nerve is as steady as an arrow in flight.

Ideal: Tradition. Our nation thrives because of our strict ways.

TAM WALTZING, HALFLING SORCERER

Despite being fair of feature, dark of hair, and sharp of eye, Tam Waltzing is only noticed by people who specifically seek him. There is a shadowy, insubstantial quality to him, as though he is a mere silhouette of a man rather than a complete being.

Inhospitable and Alone. Like every member of his family stretching back untold generations, Tam served the lords and ladies of the Fadinglea family. When the elders of the family joined the Great Retreat, the service of their courtfolk was transferred to the elfmarked members left behind in the Arbonesse, who quickly freed them of their vows of servitude and departed for the south. The Waltzing clan was stung by their abandonment but endured and sought their fortunes in Zobeck. It didn't take long for Tam to realize his new shadow fey patrons saw him and his as little more than slaves, so he murdered them and disappeared into the Cartways, taking nothing but his clothing and a family heirloom with him.

Freedom or Death. Once he established a home for himself beneath the city, Tam sought out others of his kind to join the revolution he convinced himself was needed to free the courtfolk from those who held them in the yoke of servitude. He now has a small cadre, mostly of young courtfolk halfings and disenfranchised kobolds, with whom he strikes against Zobeck's shadow fey and their interests. A number of arsons and vicious murders have been attributed to the group, but their political message has gone unnoticed as the authorities see them as a gang of thugs and killers rather than the group of freedom fighters Tam envisions.

CHARACTERISTICS

Personality Trait. It's time for my fellows to wake up and be taken advantage of no longer.

Ideal: Anger. What's the point of helping anyone when we've been discarded? Our existence is an elven joke.

Bond. I can't read the inscription on this odd elven ring, but it's all I have left of my family and our history of loyal service.

WRAITHSTRIDER, RAVENFOLK WARLOCK

Wraithstrider is taller and thinner than most other ravenfolk. They carry themselves with a cheery disposition and confident demeanor marred only by an occasional darting look over their shoulder.

A Deal with the Master. Before arriving at Demon Mountain, the huginn who now goes by Wraithstrider was a mediocre con artist with little reputation and even less regard from others. When they arrived at the mountain however, they played their games with the wrong people and found themselves in debt to some of the Master's most well-regarded aides. In exchange for the erasure of their debt, Wraithstrider agreed to be a witness of the mountain, turning over every scrap they discover about all whom they meet to their debtholders.

Living Shadow. While seeking an end to their indenture, Wraithstrider's dreams were haunted by an unknown being of liquid darkness. The thing offered them power and freedom from the Master's chains in exchange for the completion of an occasional task. Now, Wraithstrider haunts the mountain's environs doing what they're good at: making people feel safe around them. If they have to murder an acquaintance now and then to satisfy their patron, it's merely the cost of doing business.

CHARACTERISTICS

Personality Trait. I have no problem lying to others.

Ideal: Results. In the end your task is accomplished, why be concerned with your method?

VICTROLIS HAPENNY, ELFMARKED BARD

Victrolis is not tall by any standard, and she is reed thin. Her high cheekbones are framed by long nut-brown hair she keeps coiled about her head in an elaborate series of braids. Her eyes are dark, almost hollow, but not unkind, and her sun-freckled face frequently breaks into an easy smile displaying the small gap in her front teeth.

Songs of Wind and Leaf. As he peddled joy between the small Arbonesse villages, Victrolis's minstrel father taught her the ways of the forest and how to play every song he knew. He called her his forest pixie, and they were happy, so she never asked why his eyes turned sad sometimes. As he got older, he traveled less and eventually settled in one of the villages on the eastern edge of the Arbonesse.

Tower of Riches and Grief. When Victrolis visited her father for the last time, passing through his hometown on her own travels, a minstrel in her own right, he told her about his brother. He talked for hours, delivering a tale he swore was true. He told Victrolis of the adventures he and his brother had in their youth. How they delved deeply into dark parts of the ancient forest, eventually finding an elven tower made of crystal and mithral. He spoke in exquisite detail of the things they saw in that tower, and he described being chased from it by a keening spirit. Victrolis felt her father's heartbreak at the discovery that his brother was no longer with him, and that despite long searches, he never again found the tower. After putting him to rest a few days later, Victrolis set into the forest to find the tower, her uncle, and whatever new friends and adventures were coming her way.

ZARKUT BAROS, HUMAN CLERIC

Zarkut Baros is short and portly, and he stands straight and proud. His well-fitted armor is polished and embossed in gold and crimson dragons. His black cloak is trimmed in gold. When he speaks, every word is considered before it is uttered, which sometimes results in long pauses and thoughtful looks. His voice is soft and measured, forcing those listening to him to strain in silence to hear every word.

From Fisher to Favored. Zarkut grew up in poverty on the docks of Droisha, where he and his brothers fished for bream and octopus in their family's well-patched rowboat. They managed to bring in enough for the dinner table, but there was rarely extra to take to market. Life was drudgery with little hope for improvement.

When the Mharoti legions arrived, Zarkut's brothers took up arms to defend their homeland. Zarkut saw no point in fighting the inevitable, and while they were slain to the last, he protected his sisters and mother by informing Mharoti agents about the location of resistance cells and their sympathizers. He struck up a friendship of a kind with one of his contacts, a clergyman of Baal, and was initiated into the cult shortly after.

The Illyrian Emissary. For a human, Zarkut rose quickly in the esteem of his superiors in the cult and with the occupying army's leadership. As a reward for his service, he was sent to Salba to begin a whisper campaign against the rulers of the Maritime Republic of Triolo. He has since purchased a modest estate in the city where he and his remaining family live while he works to subvert the common folk to the Mharoti Empire's cause.

CHARACTERISTICS

Personality Trait. I say just enough to get people interested and then let them come to me.

Ideal: Security. Strong government and structure provide safety.

Bond. The empire annexed my home, and my life changed for the better. I'll do my best to bring the same fortune to others.

Flaw. I hate people who seem more secure or free than I am.
